Why is my milk not frothing keurig

If you purchase an independently reviewed product or service through a link on our website, SPY.com may receive an affiliate commission. Most people can't even begin to function without their morning cup of joe, to the point where making one with a traditional coffee maker can seem like a tall task. When you only have a primitive brain operating in the morning, the best Keurig coffee makers simplify the process so even your caveman morning brain can understand: drop K-cup in K-cup sized hole. Press start. Drink coffee. Repeat. That incredibly simple process of making a good cup of joe is exactly how Keurig coffee makers took over the coffee world. In the e-commerce world, it's easy to use cliches like "This product revolutionized the industry" or "such and such brand disrupted the game." But when it comes to Keurig, that's the honest truth. In this post, we're going to be breaking down everything you need to know to find the perfect Keurig maker: Courtesy of Amazon "This post was last updated on February 4, 2022. When you're ready to start your morning with a minimum effort cup of coffee, it's hard to beat a coffee maker that makes a consistently good single cup of coffee. There are a wide variety of Keurig coffee makers for sale, so we've rounded our recommendations for the best Keurig coffee machines to make your purchase decision as easy as Keurig makes your morning cup of coffee. Keep reading to find the best Keurigs for sale right now. In addition, we've decided to share a few recommendations for the best Keurig alternatives. BEST OVERALL When you want a little more control of your Keurig, spring for the K-Elite. It's programmable, so you can set it the night before and wake up to the smell of a freshly brewed cup of coffee. You can even control the coffee temperature, size or whether you want iced or hot coffee. Plus, the large reservoir holds up to eight cups of coffee before it needs to be refilled. For those times when you aren't in the mood for a cup of coffee, you can brew iced drinks, hot tea or cocoa. When you're using your machine a lot, the Keurig K-Elite will alert you when it is time to clean it out (known as descaling). Unlike other machines from Keurig, it's only available in neutral metallic colors, but that's a minor drawback for a single-serving coffee maker with such positive reviews. This home coffee maker will last for years with very little maintenance, and it's an affordable option as well. The Bottom Line: While the Keurig K-Supreme Plus SMART featured below has more advanced features, we believe the affordable and user-friendly K-Elite is the best Keurig coffee maker for most people. NEW PRICE DROP Courtesy of Amazon RUNNER UP This is Keurig's brand new coffee maker released in 2021, complete with SMART features that make brewing the perfect cup even easier and more convenient. It comes with BrewID, a feature for customizing your ideal cup in terms of brand, roast, strength and temperature, so you can recreate it every morning. The machine is built to recognize the exact pod you've put in and adjust the brew settings based on coffee-expert recommendations. You can fine-tune your cup and the MultiStream Technology extracts the full flavor and aroma. What really sets this Keurig apart is its smart features. The K-Supreme Plus SMART connects with the Keurig app, which you can use to schedule your morning cup of coffee. You can also save up to 10 custom favorite settings so everyone in your household gets their own perfect cup every time. We named this one of the best Christmas gifts of 2021, and it's only slightly more expensive than the more basic K-Elite model. PRICE DROP! Courtesy of Keurig LATTE AND CAPPUCCINO LOVERS When lattes and cappuccinos are your jam, The Keurig K-Cafe is the best Keurig coffee maker for you. The milk frother creates both hot and cold frothed milk to go with your specialty coffee drinks. And if you have a little leftover, you can store it in the fridge using the lid. Plus, cleanup is easy considering the frother is dishwasher safe. When plain ol' coffee doesn't do it for you anymore, this milk frothing option is the way to go. Courtesy of Amazon BUDGET BUY When you want a simple cup of coffee, but a few more sizing options than the K-Classic featured below, then the K-Select is a nice upgrade. With four different cup size options, as well as the ability to choose between regular and strong coffee, making a cup is still incredibly simple, but now with a little more variety. The large reservoir holds enough water for five cups of coffee. Like the Elite and K-Cafe options, this Keurig will let you know when it is time to descale, ensuring that you continue to have tasty fresh brews. If you're fine without extra frills and can go without the additional size option, save some coin on the K-Classic instead. Plus, just like the popular (and retired) Keurig K-250, the K-Select comes with more fun color options to match your kitchen decor. Head to Keurig's official store to find all of the K-Select models for sale. If you're looking for the most affordable Keurig, then the K-Select is our top recommendation. Occasionally, we've seen Amazon drop prices as low as $90, and right now Walmart has select models priced at just $110. Read More: How to Clean Your Keurig Coffee Machine the Right Way Courtesy of Amazon CONTENDER The newest offerings from a brand aren't always their best, and for the money, we think there are better Keurigs for sale right now. However, there is a lot to love about the Keurig K-Supreme, which is the previous generation of the K-Supreme Plus SMART featured above. (The more expensive K-Supreme Plus lets you program preferences for up to three users, while the SMART model featured above connects to the Keurig app and offers schedules.) The K-Supreme has the more streamlined design that's typical of newer Keurigs, and thus takes up less space on your kitchen counters. This model offers Keurig's MultiStream Technology, which Keurig promises will extract all of the flavor and aroma from your coffee pods of choice. On top of that, the K-Supreme comes with a 66oz water reservoir, a "Strong Brew" setting and a slimmer design (this coffee maker is less than 8 inches wide). Like the best Keurig coffee makers, the water reservoir is removable and the brewer can handle 6-12 oz cups of coffee. You can fit a travel mug of 7.2-inches below the brewer. Courtesy of Target BEST ALL-IN-ONE SOLUTION The K-Duo has a unique feature that sets it apart from the best Keurig coffee makers — in addition to a single-serving pod brewer, the K-Duo Plus can also brew ground coffee in a separate 12-cup glass carafe. By combining a traditional coffee maker with the convenience of a Keurig, the K-Duo line was designed to offer the best of both worlds. While there are better traditional coffee makers for sale at this price point, if you like the idea of having your coffee cake and eating it too, this is a great solution. Brew a carafe of coffee for guests or dinner parties, then use the single-serve coffee maker for your morning cup of coffee. The Keurig K-Duo Plus is the premium version of the popular K-Duo model. While we haven't listed the Plus version of Keurig coffee makers as a separate product previously, we're making an exception here for two reasons. First, there's a substantial price difference ($199 for the K-Duo Plus versus $99 for the K-Duo Essentials). Second, the Plus version features a different design that takes up far less room on your countertop. The Plus combines the carafe and single-serve brewers into a single spout, which means this coffee maker is slimmer and more convenient than the K-Duo pictured below. Finally, the carafe coffee maker can be programmed up to 24 hours in advance so your morning coffee is ready the moment you wake up, which is a great feature for those who love the convenience of Keurig but prefer a full pot of coffee. Courtesy of Amazon BEST FOR SMALL KITCHENS One of Keurig's newest creations, the super-slim Keurig K-Mini and K-Mini Plus are perfect for small kitchens and people who live alone. Measuring in at just 4.5-inches wide, these Keurig coffee makers take up virtually no space on your countertop. We also appreciate the fact that this new Keurig comes in seven different color options and costs well under $100. Like other K-Cup machines, these single-serving coffee makers can brew 6-12 oz cups of coffee or tea. For our money, we prefer the K-Mini Plus, which includes a hidden storage compartment where you can hide up to 9 pods. The Plus model also comes with a "Strong Brew" setting and features a removable water container for easy cleaning. The downside? You'll need to fill up that water container with every use, which can be annoying. A single-use water reservoir was a feature of early Keurig machines, but if you don't mind refilling it each morning, this is an affordable Keurig coffee maker that gets the job done. Courtesy of Amazon BEST VALUE If you live alone or with one roommate or partner, then the best Keurig for your household might be this compact option. The K-Classic has three different cup size options — 6, 8, and 10 ounces. And that's pretty much the extent of this coffee maker's coffee customization. Drop a K-cup in, select a size, and drink your coffee. If you don't need any frills, just a simple cup of joe to get you going, this is the most affordable option from Keurig. This coffee maker can accommodate a 7.1-inch travel mug. Courtesy of Amazon ALSO CONSIDER The standard version of the K-Duo Line, the Keurig K-Duo has a more reasonable price point, although it does feature a clunkier design. Even so, this hybrid system costs $140, which is a more than fair price for a dual-function coffee maker like this. As in other Keurig models, the K-Duo has a large water reservoir (shared between the two coffee makers), a compact design and can brew 6-12 oz cups of coffee in seconds. There's also one other feature worth noting — this programmable coffee maker can be set to brew a carafe of coffee up to 24 hours in advance. This makes this Keurig a great option for second homes and Airbnbs, as well as one of the best coffee makers for large households. (We also recommend the Keurig K-Duo Essentials, which doesn't offer the same programming features but costs less than the premium and standard version.) Courtesy of Amazon BEST KEURIG MACHINE FOR OFFICES For offices with more than 10-15 people, a standard home Keurig machine won't do. That's when you need to upgrade to one of Keurig's commercial coffee makers. For small to medium-sized businesses, we recommend the new Keurig K155. This commercial Keurig coffee maker has an extra-large 90-ounce water reservoir and can be used to brew tea, coffee and hot cocoa. The K155 also has an easy-to-use touchscreen and can brew coffee in a variety of sizes. If you're a business owner or office manager searching for the best Keurig coffee makers for your office, this is a dependable option that's perfect for small and mid-size businesses. Courtesy of Keurig After Keurig coffee makers became wildly popular, essentially all other coffee makers had to adapt to the new kid on the block. Keurig is not your only choice for a deluxe K-Cup coffee maker. Below you'll find our recommendations when you want a K-cup coffee maker, but not necessarily a Keurig. Here are the best Keurig alternatives for fans of single-serving coffee. 1. Nutribullet Brew Choice Pod + Carafe Coffee Maker BEST OVERALL Nutribullet released its first coffee maker in September 2021. SPY tested out this dual coffee maker, and we found that it really did make it easy to make both full pots and single-serving coffee. Most dual coffee makers do a better job at one than the other, but Nutribullet's new coffee maker impressed our product testers. If you're looking for a more affordable Keurig alternative, then this isn't a great option, but it's an excellent coffee maker and perfect for households that brew full pots of coffee as often as they use K-cups. Courtesy of Nutribullet 2. Hamilton Beach 2-Way Brewer (49980A) MOST VERSATILE Like the K-Duo Plus, the Hamilton Beach 2-Way Coffee Maker is capable of easily brewing a full pot of coffee and single-serve coffee. Unlike the K-Duo Plus, this Hamilton Beach appliance only costs $50, which is a great value. Plus, because it brews your coffee from ground coffee instead of pods, it will arguably serve up better coffee, too. Easy to program and easy to clean, this small coffee maker offers a great value and is a more than worthy alternative to the best Keurig coffee makers. Courtesy of Amazon 3. Cuisinart SS-10P1 DIGITAL DISPLAY The large digital display makes it easy to make a quick cup of joe in the morning, especially when you've got the morning fog clouding your brain. You can use any brand of K-cup coffee pods including Keurig brand. And it has a large water reservoir to make several cups of coffee before it needs a refill. Low maintenance mornings — yes, please. Courtesy of Amazon 4. Hamilton Beach FlexBrew BEST FOR LARGE CUPS There are times when K-cups are convenient, and times when you want a fresh cup of coffee made from ground-up whole beans — and a lot of them. Get a coffee maker that can do both like the Hamilton Beach Flex Brew. All you need to do is grab a K-cup, or add fresh ground coffee into the pod holder, put it in the FlexBrew and press brew, and you can get up to 14 oz of coffee in one shot. Most Keurigs stop at 10 or 12 oz, which makes this perfect for filling up your favorite travel tumbler. It's a simple, yet flexible Keurig alternative. Turns out it's not just a clever name. Courtesy of Walmart 5. Chulux Single Serve Coffee Maker BEST BUDGET If you don't care about the bells and whistles and all you want is a single-serve cup of coffee made simple, the Chulux Coffee Maker is the way to go. It makes both K-Cup and ground coffee, and is as simple as one button brewing. Plus, it only costs $40. It's an economical choice when all you really want is an easy pick-me-up in the morning. Courtesy of Amazon 6. Nespresso Vertuo Coffee and Espresso Machine BEST SPLURGE Ok, so it's not quite a K-cup machine, but this Nespresso Vertuo Coffee and Espresso Machine makes delicious espresso drinks in your home. It uses patented centrifusion technology to spin the pod as water enters to produce that creamy delicious pour of coffee. And the included milk frother can add the finishing touches to any cap or latte. It's a great choice if you're willing to pay a premium on the machine and Nespresso pods. Courtesy of Amazon For that single, delicious cup of coffee, it's all about the best K-cup coffee pods. A K-cup puts a single cup's worth of ground coffee into a "pod." The pod consists of a thick plastic layer, a permeable filter layer, and a foil layer that allows the coffee to be brewed inside of this little pod. These K-cups come in virtually every variety of roast and flavor you can think of, providing coffee lovers with as many options as bagged coffee beans. The Keurig itself has a large water reservoir that will need to be refilled every couple of days. Water is sucked from the reservoir into heating chambers where it is brought up to a high temperature. The pressurized water then makes its way to a hose towards the top of the brewer. After you put the K-cup in the hole, close the lid, and select the amount of coffee you want (often displayed in various cup sizes, from 4 oz to 10 oz). Two pins poke the K-cup — one on top to allow the water to enter the K-cup, and one in the bottom where the coffee comes out into your cup. After about 20 to 30 seconds, it's already done brewing. All you have to do is open the lid back up and throw the cup away. The first Keurig cups came in little plastic cups, which weren't great for the environment (more on this below). Fortunately, you can now by compostable Keurig-friendly coffee pods, although they're usually a little more expensive. And don't think you can only use Keurig branded coffee pods for your Keurig machine. Thankfully, there are a handful of K-cup compatible options we love: 1. SF Bay Coffee Fog A quick way to remove the morning "fog" this SF Bay coffee makes a delicious full-bodied, medium roast. The beans come from Central and South America, and are 100% Kosher. Plus, they are Mother Earth approved, as the pods are made from plant-based materials. Good coffee without hurting mother nature. That's a win-win. Courtesy of Amazon 2. The Original Donut Shop For those who like a bold cup of coffee, the Original Donut Shop K-cups is a medium roast that uses more coffee in each pod than your average K-cup for a stronger flavor. This bold flavored coffee is one of Amazon's most popular with over 20,000 user reviews and 4.7-star rating. The people have spoken — bold is the way to start your morning. Courtesy of Amazon 3. Starbucks Veranda Blend When you can't make it to a real Starbucks for your morning cup of coffee, settle for the next best thing. Starbucks makes a lot of K-cup pods with various flavors and roasts, but we prefer the company's lighter blonde roast, the Veranda Blend. Perfect for those who prefer a stronger cup of coffee but prefer a milder taste, the Veranda Blend offers great flavor for a single-serve coffee pod. Order from Amazon and get 96 pods that will save you an extra trip to the grocery store. Courtesy of Amazon 4. Dunkin' Original Blend The most popular blend from Dunkin' can now be enjoyed from the comfort of your home in K-cup form. It's a smooth Arabica Coffee, medium roast blend that isn't too bitter or acidic — a great way to kick a morning off. This pack includes 60 pods, or two months of wonderful cups of coffee in the morning. Courtesy of Amazon Keurig coffee machines were first introduced to the home in 1992, around the same time when Starbucks started to hit its stride. This is important because Starbucks was popularizing the idea of single cups of coffee to the masses, even though single cups of coffee were (and still are) far more expensive compared to buying in bulk. By 1998, when the first K-cup Keurig machines were released, the company went all-in on a simple premise: people want a single cup of coffee in the morning, but they don't want to pay Starbucks prices. Keurig K-Cups, although still more expensive than bagged, bulk coffee, were less expensive than going to your local Starbucks or indie coffee shop. But for nearly a decade after developing the first K-cups, Keurig struggled to break into the "holy grail" of the coffee market — your kitchen counter. According to The Boston Globe, the turning point was the company's acquisition by Green Mountain Coffee in 2006. Soon after, in the midst of the 2008 Great Recession, the company finally reached critical mass, and America has been obsessed with single-serving coffee ever since. Have you ever tried to make a single cup of coffee with a pot-coffee machine? It sucks. Sure, making a pot of coffee isn't difficult, but not everybody drinks multiple cups of coffee a day. And making a single cup's worth in a pot is hard — it comes out too watery or like mud. In the same way that cooking for one should seem simple, but often is a more difficult task than cooking for a group, making a single cup of good coffee with a regular coffee machine is way harder than it should be. Sure, you can save what you don't drink and reheat it, but coffee is way better when it's fresh. There are plenty of people in the world for whom a single cup of coffee is really all they need (this article was written by one), and Keurig coffee makers are the ideal solution: single cup, check. Fast, check. Easy, check. Consistent, check. So much so, that over 42% of American households now own a single cup coffee maker, according to Statista. And now that Keurig machines have new tricks up its sleeve like making teas, lattes, and iced drinks to go along with coffee, the best Keurig coffee machines are poised to remain a staple in our homes. Truth be told, K-cups are a blessing and a curse. They are a blessing for our easily created morning cup of coffee, they are a curse for Mother Earth. Most K-cups are not recyclable, although Keurig is striving for 100% of their K-cups to be recyclable by the end of 2020, and 100% of all packaging to be converted to recyclable materials by 2025. Currently, there are many recyclable and compostable pods, but users still need to peel off the top foil, remove the grounds, and remove the filter from the cup before it is considered "recyclable." Let's be honest: if you already aren't willing to grind up your coffee to make your morning cup, you probably won't be willing to take the necessary steps to recycle those pods. Here's a good compromise option. Keurig does make a re-useable K-cup that allows you to put your own ground coffee into it, which does two things: helps you save the environment, and allows you to brew single-serving coffee using your favorite ground coffee. You lose a little of the convenience factor, which is a big reason why you bought a Keurig in the first place. And, (speaking from experience) they are a bit of a pain to clean. There are non-Keurig branded reusable pods, but they don't always work with all Keurig machines, so it's best to play it safe and buy an official reusable coffee filter from Keurig for $15. Editor's Note: Insanely, Keurig has discontinued its official reusable coffee pod. You can still find these products for sale on sites like Amazon while supplies last. There are also off-brand options available in 2022. Jonathan Knoder | SPY On a much smaller scale of drawbacks (it's hard to trump "destroying the Earth" as the number one drawback), K-cups are relatively expensive compared to bagged coffee. You can get better tasting coffee (whole bean is the way to go), and more of it, if you're willing to take the extra time to grind your coffee before-hand (trust us, it is worth it). Remember: if you're surfing Amazon for a budget pack of K-cups for your Keurig machine, be sure to read the user reviews, not all K-cups are sized to work for Keurig 2.0 coffee machines. As you are right to assume, Keurig 2.0 machines are the newest version of Keurig coffee makers. Unfortunately, when the upgrade happened, so did the size of the pods. (Apple users certainly know about changing port sizes). Keurig 2.0 machines use bigger pods than previous versions (1.0), but the good thing is, most 1.0 K-cup sizes are still compatible with newer machines, but it doesn't go backward — Keurig 2.0 K-cups won't fit in a 1.0 machine. Cleaning your Keurig is pretty straightforward. This is a process called "descaling," which removes built-up calcium deposits which can hinder the performance of your machine. Keurig sells a descaling solution, but you can just as easily use distilled white vinegar instead. Cleaning your machine is a simple couple of steps: Pour the solution or vinegar into the water reservoir and run the machine without a pod. Run the machine until the entire reservoir is dry. Let the machine sit for at least a half-hour to let the solution work its magic inside of the machine. Clean reservoir Fill the reservoir with water and run at least 12 large cups worth to ensure solution or vinegar is completely removed from the machine.
